In establishing the American Indian Employment Program, California made a positive response to the reality that American Indians suffer some of the highest rates of unemployment in the nation. The Program is unique in that no other state has developed such a project to service American Indians throughout its Mainstream Job Service activities.

The purpose of the American Indian Employment Program is the placement of American Indian job seekers in the best available jobs. It is our goal to achieve economic independence for the American Indian community through long-term employment, education, and training.

> Geographic Service Areas We offer our services in 10 offices throughout California. Our targeted service population includes American Indians, Native Hawaiians, and Alaskans.

Type of Organization Media, Broadcasting

Types of Services

Founded in 1975, the American Indian Film Festival is the oldest and most recognized film exposition dedicated to the preservation of Native Americans in cinema. The American Indian Film Festival is produced by Native Americans to provide a showcase and an outlet for films that may not otherwise receive due cinematic recognition in theatrical and non-theatrical film release.

The American Indian Film Festival has become a film maker's first source in gauging public response to new film and video productions. Exposure and public acceptance at the American Indian Film Festival often provides major and independent producers a marketing strategy to broaden distribution in general release and/or cable release. The American Indian Film Festival marks a contemporary approach whereby Native Americans produce, select, and showcase the most excellent Indian films to support a burgeoning Indian film industry while fostering public understanding and appreciation of Native Americans in today's society.

The annual Film Festival is held the second weekend in November at the Palace of Fine Arts, in San Francisco. AIFI publishes "Indian Cinema Entertainment," a quarterly film, media, and cultural arts journal.

Types of Services

CILS is a statewide non-profit corporation organized to provide legal representation to low income individuals with issues of federal Indian law within the priorities set by our Board of Directors. The following priorities were established by the CILS Board of Trustees to direct the staff in its allocation of resources:

- Preserve and enhance the Indian land base in California
- Secure self-determination and Indian control of reservations and Reservation programs
- Secure restoration and improvement of services which federal agencies have provided to Indians outside of California, but which those agencies have either failed to provide or provided on a severely limited basis to California Indians
- Secure bureaucratic accountability for governmental policies, actions, or commissions which significantly and adversely affect California Indians
- Secure and protect the full civil rights of California Indians
- Protect and encourage the growth of Indian heritage

Treatment Program

Type of Services

Founded in 1963, the Friendship House Association of American Indians, Inc. is a non-profit organization located in San Francisco, California. The program was founded in 1963 as a drop-in center and multi-service agency for American Indians who had been relocated to the Bay Area from their reservations. Over the last three decades, Friendship House has evolved into a comprehensive drug and alcohol treatment program. Our 30 bed, fully licensed facility, which can accommodate women and men is located in the Mission District of San Francisco. We provide residential and an extensive aftercare treatment service component to approximately 100 clients and their families.

Services

Primary Residential Treatment: Highly structured and intensive 90 day residential treatment for men and women including individual sessions, 12 step meetings, health workshops, relationship and family education and traditional counseling.

Aftercare Program: A highly structured, supportive program for clients who have successfully completed the residential component of treatment. The 90 day Aftercare Program helps the client transition from residential care into a supportive aftercare setting in the community. Services also include support groups, individual and family counseling, anger management, 12 step programs, on-going personal and professional skills building, outings, and clean and sober events.

Job Readiness Support Project: Created to assist Friendship House alumni, aftercare and outpatient clients in their efforts to re-enter the community equipped with job related skills, the project provides technical assistance with resumes and cover letter development, education and employment applications forms, access to job training and career development services, orientation to basic computer programs and opportunities for computer practice, orientation to basic Internet programs, and one on one coaching sessions to assess personal skills and prepare for employment interviews.

Youth Project: The project serves high-risk American youth ages 8 through 17 years. The Friendship House Youth Project provides the following activities: After school programs, field trips, organized sports programs, and cultural activities, talking circles, ATOD (alcohol, tobacco and other drugs) education, wellness education, HIV and STD prevention, life skills, leadership training, positive parenting, and family interventions.

American Indian Lodge: A comprehensive drug and alcohol treatment program for women with children. This fully licensed facility is located in Oakland. Fees are determined on a "sliding scale" basis. It is a highly structured and intensive one year residential treatment program including individual Sessions, 12-step meetings, health workshops, relationship and family education and traditional counseling. Phone: (510) 535-7100

Our Santa Clara Intake/Outreach office at the Indian Health Center of Santa Clara Valley provides outreach and assists clients in transitioning to our residential treatment programs. Pre-treatment case management, in-custody consultation, and referrals are provided to American Indians with addiction problems. Phone: (408) 350-2400.

Publication of Abya Yala News Journal, Voices Indigenas Radio Program. SAIIC's activities are vital to the cultural survival and social change activities of the Indigenous peoples of Mexico, Central, and South America. Our programs are tools that simultaneously (a) inform these Indigenous peoples; (b) link Indigenous peoples throughout the Americas with each other and with non-Indigenous peoples at all levels; and (c) inform and cultivate support from the international community about our struggles and rights.

Mission

The Stanford University American Indian, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian Program (AIANNHP)/Native American Cultural Center (NACC) serves a diverse and under-represented student population. The primary mission of the Program/Center is to meet the needs of the students by recognizing the variables that exist within the Native community, and creating programs that assist them to successfully address the factors that influence degree progress and completion. The Program/Center staff understands that difficulties in this process may arise at any level from the first year through the graduate or prolessional school experience. The AIANNHP/NACC works to significantly reduce the cultural and educational barriers Native undergraduate and graduate students may encounter in transitioning from their high school or other university experience to the rigors of attending a premiere research institution. To do this, the program initiates a series of interventions that begins with the earliest contact with students and continues until their university goals have been met and beyond.

Types of Services

Located next door to the Native American Cultural Center; the Alannh is the University Student Affairs office charged with providing support for the American Indian, Alaska Native, and Native Hawaiian community at Stanford. The Alannh advocates for concerns of importance to the Native American community, and serves as a liaison to local, state, and national Native organizations.
